Nessus is a web-based penetration testing tool, designed for security testing of Unix-like systems. Nessus can scan UNIX systems running Microsoft Windows, without needing a system-specific emulator. A key feature of Nessus is that it can detect software-based security vulnerabilities (known as "0-day attacks" for their unknown existence until they are "exploited" by an attacker) and remediate them. Nessus was started by the Packet Storm Security Team in 1999 and is primarily developed by a group of UK Computer Scientists. The software is currently under active development. The authors claim Nessus (as of December 2005) is a 100% open source program. There are two versions of the Nessus software (released February 2008). One is a client-side product, and is designed to be installed on UNIX/Linux boxes; the other is a web server-side product which is designed to be run on a Microsoft Windows box and will scan the operating system running in a web browser. The web server-side version of Nessus is available on SourceForge. The client-side version of Nessus is available from the website.

I have been searching on the web for the answer to a problem with my internal virtual(vmware) built in video card and I cannot seem to find a fix. I have already put down the money to buy visual studio 2008 Professional and installed it on my other pc and tried it on the built in card and it does not work either. Anyone have any ideas what might be going on? I am running Windows XP x64 and having trouble getting the installation media to detect the sound card. I am using the VIA Unichrome
